Description

A monumental piece of exceptional refinement, typical of the great Parisian porcelain of the Napoleonic era, when the Dagoty manufactory--founded by the Dagoty brothers in Paris--became one of the most prestigious rivals of Sèvres, renowned for the quality of its porcelain, its burnished gold, and its neoclassical decorations inspired by antiquity.The centerpiece, shaped like a large cup or crater, features a striking architectural and sculptural design. The wide, flared bowl has a lower section of white porcelain with a beaded texture, accentuated by fine gold fillets and a band of gold beads, which enhance its three-dimensionality and play of light.The upper band is a deep cobalt blue, adorned with a continuous frieze of classical figures in gold, depicting deities, muses, and dancing figures in ancient-style robes, in a procession reminiscent of the reliefs on Greek and Roman vases and the decoration of imperial palaces.The rim is bordered by a band of burnished gold. On either side are two sculptural handles in white biscuit porcelain shaped like masks or faun heads, modeled with great finesse and realism, which lend the piece an almost archaeological character.The cup rests on a gold tripod, formed by three lion-like legs with well-modeled claws, joined at the center; these legs possess great sculptural power and are perfectly in line with the Empire style, which favored references to Egypt and Roman antiquity.A piece of considerable importance for museums and collectors, ideal as a centerpiece in a dining room, on a console table, in a display case, or in a library; perfect in a classical, neoclassical, or Empire-style setting, but also as a sculptural and precious accent in a contemporary context.Period: Early 19th century;Provenance: Paris;Dimensions: Height 29 cm; Diameter 28 cm;Condition: Excellent condition;Documentation: Certificate of authenticity.Support: We are available for further clarification, information, and images;Shipping: Available throughout Italy, Europe, and the rest of the world.
