Description

Daum Nancy Perfume Bottle - Orchid and Spiderweb DesignA charming multilayered glass perfume bottle by Daum Nancy, featuring an elegant cylindrical shape with rounded shoulders, topped with its original frosted glass stopper. It is adorned with a delicate naturalistic design depicting a blooming orchid, accompanied by foliage and a fine spiderweb subtly integrated into the composition.The floral design stands out for its violet and purple tones, contrasting with the amber-yellow and pinkish-brown shades of the background. The green foliage adds a touch of freshness to the overall design, while the engraving and the different layers of glass create a beautiful decorative depth.The composition is particularly interesting due to the combination of the orchid and the spiderweb, reflecting the manufacturer's penchant for naturalistic depictions and unusual details. The flower is reminiscent of certain varieties of wild orchids, whose unique forms greatly inspired Art Nouveau artists.Founded in Nancy in 1878 by Jean Daum, the manufactory gradually established itself as one of the leading names of the École de Nancy. Under the leadership of Auguste and Antonin Daum, it developed a remarkable repertoire of floral and animal motifs, combining acid etching, wheel-carving, and polychrome enamels.With its delicate decoration, the original combination of orchids and spiderwebs, and its warm color palette, this bottle beautifully illustrates the refinement of Daum Nancy's creations around 1900.
