Description

Gallé Vase - Decorated with redcurrant branches, signed with a starAn elegant multilayered glass vase from Établissements Gallé, featuring an ovoid shape with a short, shouldered neck, resting on a slightly flared base. It is adorned with a beautiful naturalistic design of currant branches, featuring lush leaves and clusters of fruit, delicately rendered in the various layers of glass.The composition stands out for its rich shades of purplish red and wine red, contrasting with a pinkish-white background and orange-yellow hues at the base. The cameo engraving, created using acid etching and refined with a wheel, highlights the contours of the foliage and the delicacy of the botanical design, offering a remarkable interplay of colors and depth.The star signature is particularly significant for the history of the glassworks. It characterizes a portion of the production of the Établissements Gallé, which continued after Émile Gallé's death in 1904 under the direction of his wife, Henriette. This mark appears primarily on pieces from the early years following the master glassmaker's passing, particularly between 1904 and 1906.This period reflects a commitment to preserving Émile Gallé's artistic legacy while continuing to produce his iconic designs. The factory thus carried on its remarkable floral and naturalistic repertoire until its closure in 1936.With its fruit motifs, warm tones, and star-shaped signature, this vase is a fine example of the work produced by the early Établissements Gallé in the early 20th century.
