Description

Daum Nancy France Pitcher - Late ProductionAn elegant glass pitcher by Daum Nancy, featuring a baluster shape with a slightly bulging body, extended by a cylindrical neck with a pinched spout and a side handle applied while the glass was still hot.It stands out for its superb deep ruby-red color, enlivened by clouds and purplish-black marbling that give the material an almost mineral-like appearance. The richness of the contrasts and the chromatic variations lend this piece a particularly striking decorative presence. The glass, worked from a solid mass, reveals beautiful depth and a lustrous surface that highlights the color effects.The "Daum Nancy France" signature attests to the factory's production during the 20th century. Founded in 1878 in Nancy by Jean Daum, the company underwent significant artistic development under the leadership of his sons Auguste and Antonin. Following the grand naturalistic creations of Art Nouveau, the manufactory gradually renewed its repertoire during the 1920s, favoring more streamlined forms and new chromatic explorations, in keeping with the Art Deco aesthetic.This pitcher thus illustrates a different facet of Daum's production, placing greater emphasis on the richness of the material, color effects, and the simplicity of form. A decorative piece with a distinct character, it attests to the diversity of the renowned Nancy crystal manufacturer's craftsmanship.
