Description

Round dinner plate with a scalloped rim adorned with gilded wolf's teeth; decorated with polychrome floral motifs on a white background; Paris porcelain, manufactured by the Count of Provence. Louis XVI period, after 1787.The underside bears a signature in iron red, along with the monogram LSX in iron red for Louis Stanislas Xavier, Count of Provence, brother of King Louis XVI and the future Louis XVIII.The Clignancourt factory, located in Montmartre, was under the patronage of the Count of Provence and bore the name "Manufacture de Monsieur." It specialized in luxury production, competing directly with the Sèvres Manufactory. It was not until 1787 that the Clignancourt manufactory gained the same privileges as that of Sèvres and was permitted to use polychrome decoration and
