Description

Here is a piece of real character, made as much for the eye as for use. Pair of wrought iron andirons, the front motif evoking interlaced flames rising from the hearth, forged with dynamism. A work by Raymond Subes, French master ironworker, whose sense of movement animates the silhouette with an upward surge. 1950s work. It will naturally find its place before a carefully dressed hearth and will appeal to lovers of bold, signed design.
