Description

This magnificent 19th-century Imari porcelain oval platter showcases remarkable craftsmanship, characterized by floral medallions in shades of cobalt blue and iron red. Measuring 40 cm in length and 30.5 cm in width, it is a substantial serving piece--often referred to as a large roast platter or display dish. During the Edo and Meiji periods, these large, scalloped pieces were highly prized in Europe for adorning the tables of grand estates or for display on sideboards. The dense pattern of curvilinear foliage (karakusa), combined with the four main medallions, creates a perfect visual balance for a piece of this scale.
