Description

Oil on canvas by the artist Jean Axatard born in 1931.

This artist is distinguished by a naive treatment of human and animal figures while landscapes and architectures tend to a Cézanne style. The scenes he illustrates are often those of everyday life; the works of Axatard often give off an impression of tranquility sometimes borrowed from nostalgia.

These scenes of life where many characters move and sometimes swarm in landscapes combining architecture and nature, also recall the manner of Bruegel the Elder to organize the canvas.

In all the works of the artist, it is important to note the mastery of the skies and the light.
