He moved to Paris in 1900 and was destined to paint, while traveling a lot, in Italy, India, Ceylon. He is the pupil of Paul Sérusier and Maurice Denis at the Ranson Academy between 1913 and 14. From the 1920s, he asserts himself as one of the leading figures of Expressionism and will remain one of the most brilliant representatives. He also flirts with surrealism. During the Occupation, his Jewish-born wife must hide and die for lack of care. Goerg will be traumatized and will have a hard time getting back to normal life. Nevertheless, in the 50s, he taught the art of engraving at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts in Paris, then became a member of the Academy of Fine Arts in 1965. He remarried and found a certain joy of life , his wife becoming one of his favorite themes including the famous "women-flowers", all in serene melancholy. Alas, the respite is short-lived, he died in Callian, in the Var in 1969. The work represents an unusual, obsessive world with a palette sumptuously enamelled and nuanced. His philosophical and religious research proves an excessively sensitive personality. Among the galleries that exhibited it: Paul Guillaume, Berthe Weill, Bernheim Jeune, Jeanne Castel, David and Garnier.
