patterns would be a factor of great antiquity.These carpets are called "KAZAK AUX AIGLES", "KAZAK ADLER" (eagle in German), "KAZAK with the coat of arms", but still, "KAZAK with swords", the drawings are typical of this kind, and therefore very recognizable in the many Caucasian and Armenian carpet decorations.It is impossible to confuse them.The English call them Sunburst Kazakh, blazing sun.Some see it as an eagle, an interlocking saber, or an old coat of arms that reminds us of the two-headed eagle of the old nobiliary armorial bearings of the old Russian and German empires, which is why they are named Kazak Adler.The SEYCHOUR carpets also present a very sophisticated, typical bird-like decor, yet their geographical location of production is much further to the Caspian Sea.
