Description

Oil on canvas from the 18th century. Perspective of hunting dogs, of Louis XIV, "Diane et Blonde" stationary, watching for a pheasant. Rich in detail, this beautiful large 18th century master canvas illuminates the coat and the head of the dogs, determined to hunt a pheasant, hidden under the foliage of a luxuriant plant, all under a sky at the first light of the dawn. Alexandre-François DESPORTES is perhaps the first French painter to have taken hunting and animals as the main subjects of his paintings. François Desportes (1661 - 1734), returned to France after having worked at the court of the King of Poland. Appointed by Louis XIV, painter of his venery, he was received as an academician in 1699, then adviser to the Academy in 1704. François Desportes, participated himself in the hunts and
