Description

This statue of Saint Joseph is an 18th-century Italian Capirote figure, traditionally used in religious processions and ceremonies. Capitoline statues of this period were often designed with articulated metal arms, allowing the figure's posture to be adjusted according to different liturgical contexts. These sculptures were also dressed in appropriate garments based on religious celebrations.

The finely carved face and hands showcase the meticulous craftsmanship of the time. The articulated arms add a dynamic and lifelike quality to the figure, enhancing its expressive presence in devotional practices.
