Description

Beautiful set of koro or burners in patinated bronze Meiji period (1868-1912) composed of two pieces covered with bronze and gilded characters, one is a trainer or monkey trainer and the one on the right must be a Japanese deity. The cylindrical bodies of these pots are decorated with flying animals such as geese, cranes and ducks. These statuettes are originally fixed on these pots, the screws are original and are also lacquered. These pots are dismantled in three parts; the tripod base, the central body and the lid. The quality of the statuettes, their gilding, patina and chiselling undoubtedly brings to mind the Miyao workshop which was one of the best manufacturers of okimono of this style in Japan and in exporting very many pieces of exceptional
