Description

An impressive 19th-century English screen composed of 4 panels, divided into two separate elements. Each panel is adorned with stenciled wallpaper, designed to mimic the look of decorative leather, reminiscent of the refined Victorian interiors of the period. This technique, popular at the time, added an elegant and luxurious touch while being more affordable than genuine leather.

The generous dimensions of each panel--56 cm wide by 185 cm high--allow for a total width of 2.34 meters when arranged end-to-end. In good overall condition, this screen serves as both a practical solution for dividing a space and a decorative object of great elegance.
