400 EUR

Period : 18th century

Condition : Très bon état

Material : Porcelain

Description

Superb broth covered on its display, in porcelain painted with bouquets in shades of gray, Louis XVI period. The decor consists of many bouquets, all different, hand painted in very fine shades of gray. These bouquets are linked by purple ribbons and garlands of golden leaves. This large garland pattern spreads widely on the display wing, and the edges of the cup and lid. Bordered with gold bands, this decoration stands out against a white background. The formal composition of this porcelain is purely Louis XVI: Detached circular display, punctuated by slight steps, a remainder of transition style which does not qualify this platter. High-heeled throat broth, surmounted by a flattened hemispherical circular cut, with large handles with sober curvatures. Tapered cover with slightly concave
