Glass paste: treatment of glass known from Antiquity (Pliny), rediscovered by H. Cros around 1880, who was looking for a fusible material that could be worked in a pasty or liquid state. It is a colored crystal, previously reduced to powder and mixed with water, added to a binder to compose a paste; this after baking becomes hard and translucent to be then modeled like a sculpture and colored. The real glass paste is removed by cold amalgamating crushed glasses
