Description

Regency period game table in cedar, wood renowned for its rot-proof properties. Resting on four feet ending in deer hooves and connected together by a curved and richly carved spacer. The generously curved uprights are also perforated, at their base an acanthus leaf covers the hoof. At their amortization there is a shell. We find the Régence shell on the front of the game table banner. This openwork belt is also abundantly carved with natural, floral and oval patterns. This precious piece of furniture is topped with its thick royal Belgian red marble, reinforced. Regency period.
