Description

Bukhara-Tekké carpet from the first part of the 20th century, originating from Turkmenistan or West Turkestan.

Size, 133 cm x 180 cm, 202 cm with the fringes, in very good condition, tied in a very good quality soft wool and decorated with the tribal "gül" motif alternating white and pinkish beige, surrounded by black . Repeated on the spot, these patterns give these rugs great elegance and an almost heraldic character.

A wide border enclosing the perimeter of the field completes this refined ensemble.

The supple and shiny wool composes a very tight and very fine knotting, the velvet is silky, with its bright colors, this rug has a very particular luster.

These rugs have a masculine aura and have always been popular for decorating the office of businessmen.

These majestic carpets are certainly the best in Central Asia and are the work of the Tekké tribe, but they are generally referred to as "Bukhara-Tekké".

It was not until the 1950s (1950) that these tribes began to knot large-sized rugs, which were more the prerogative of the Afghan tribes of Afghanistan closer since the end of the 19th century, commercial currents for European markets.

Central Asia was too far away to attract the attention of European traders so tekké rugs were made to be used by the tribe itself, therefore under tents, and therefore smaller.
