Description

Charming chandelier from the first half of the 20th century. It is in painted metal with a bronze patina and richly dressed with about sixty very fine porcelain flowers, perhaps Meissen. The flames are contained in painted porcelain tulips. To report a lack on one and another whole but to be glued. I point out that I have had these announced defects restored. The chandelier is now in good condition. I haven't changed the price. In the center, in the middle of the flowers is a bird as if hidden in the flowers and branches. It measures about fifty centimeters excluding the suspension chain, and 34 cm in width. Very good quality of porcelain to be cleaned. I add to this chandelier a rococo bronze wall light also decorated with porcelain flowers. Copper rods.
