Description

18th Century, Italian Carved and Silvered Wood ConsolleNaples, Italy, early 18th centuryThis finely carved and silvered wooden console table is a remarkable example of the decorative repertoire typical of Louis XIV, with elements of particular sumptuousness for the sculptural resolution of the carving, entering the Baroque period as an example of neapolitan (italian) cabinet making. The consolle has a carved band with elements with large vegetal volutes and a rich shell carving on the central part. The four legs are characterized by an arched movement, joined by crosses with an elaborate carved decoration in the centre. The top have a particular value: it is in molded "alabastro fiorito".In the important Italian palaces between the seventeenth and eighteenth century, the consolles were among
