Description

Jama Coaque Culture, Ecuador.

500 BC - 500 AD.

Beige terracotta with traces of burns and remnants of red paint.

The Jama-Coaque culture developed on the central coast of Ecuador, south of La Tolita. It is particularly famous for its elegant ceramic figurines with stereotypical features. These are differentiated by the variety and richness of their ornamentation.

This richly adorned fragmentary head is very representative of the Jama-Coaque culture. The chin is adorned with a triangular shaped labret (tembleta), the bust decorated with an imposing necklace. The open skull presents a ritual
