Description

Joshagan rug, "Jowshaqan", from the first part of the 20th century in hand-knotted wool, measuring 128 cm wide by 202 cm long.

This particular kind of rug whose design is called "djangali", jungle, takes its name from the many floral patterns that fill the rust-colored field. The shades are intense and shiny on a beautiful wool pile.

Formerly an exclusive production of the village of Jowshaqan, these rugs have also been knotted since the Second World War in Meimeh and Moutcheh Khour, villages on the main road to Isfahan.

The Meimeh have many similarities but are more rectilinear while having fewer different patterns compared to these Joshagan rugs.

They are often confused with certain Bakthiar and
