Description

Japan - Antique Japanese ivory okimono, Taisho period - early Showa period (circa 1920), depicting a scholar-painter unrolling a scroll filled with small symbolic figures, signed with a red lacquer seal. An antique Japanese ivory okimono depicting a scholar-painter on a terrace, in the act of creating. The figure holds aloft an unfurled painted scroll, filled with finely chiseled figures and embellished with sepia ochre ink motifs, evoking a symbolic and narrative register drawn from the Japanese imagination. Alongside it are the traditional attributes of the painter: a tall, square pot containing large brushes with upright bristles, and a hemispherical container on the ground, fitted with a tube, probably for ink or water. Sculpture signed with a red lacquer seal. Japanese work from the Taisho period- early
