Description

The movement of wisteria and roses, made in glass painting creates a feeling of profusion. The columns delimit the horizon, while the play of the paving outlines the perspective of the belvedere. Attention to detail is expressed in the roundness of the vases, which enhances the perspective; but also in the cracks, the play of shadows and the flowers which fall and fly away under the effect of the wind. The watercolor background associates the Mediterranean coastal village with the azure blue sea, which offers us a point of light. The shades of brown of the rocky coasts contrast with the foam suggested by the white glaze. In the background, a mountain range in mauve, pink and green tones is revealed, while dawn seems to dawn. The proportions of this painting, combined with the softness of the
