Description

Entirely hand-knotted, pure "Kurk" lamb kaine, vegetable dyes, size: 2.90mx2.00m. Bidjar rug is a type of Persian rug. Its main characteristic is its weft: it is generally formed of five threads, four of wool, quite loose and a cotton central, which is stretched. The weaver has to use a special comb to pack the knots, which gives a tight and heavy appearance to the carpet. The bidjar often has a flower decoration, very schematic design indicating a primitive inspiration. The decoration generally consists of a central medallion on a background decorated with flowers or a very dense herati motif. Other copies consist of a central medallion on a plain background with four spandrels with floral decoration. The border is classic, a central band framed by two secondary bands, the border herati pattern is frequently used,
