Master on June 12, 1771. Jean-Nicolas Blanchard known as "the young" was received at his master's degree in 1771 and took over the workshop of his brother Sylvain, on the latter's death, a workshop located rue de Cléry under the sign of "White cat". He became one of the suppliers of the Palace of Versailles and very quickly acquired a very great reputation. He produced large Louis XV style armchairs as well as Transition seats and Louis XVI armchairs, more classic but always of good quality, with noble lines and a perfect finish. He adorned his works with sculptures of roses, foliage, flower garlands, knots of ribbons and acanthus, sculptures of extreme finesse without ever the slightest overload. He also worked for many renowned upholsterers such as the Presle brothers. It ceased its activities some time before the Revolution but it is still mentioned under the Directory.
