by various popes: Giulio II della Rovere, Leo X, Clement VII Medici and Paul IV Carafa until Urban VIII was only realized with Clement XI Albani. He was responsible for the founding of the only tapestry shop in the Pontifical State which, assuming the sign of San Michele Arcangelo as a trademark, develops an ideological program in line with the institutional and educational line, which had transformed San Michele into a seat of schools. professional and artistic. The tapestry, manufacturer of marketable and quality aesthetic products, acquires greater autonomy than other schools. Linked to the commission of the popes, who depend directly on salaried workers unlike other workers active in the hospice, the tapestry follows stylistic and iconographic choices which depend on the pontiff's need to use the tapestries as a gift to foreign delegations or legations. papal. Sent abroad. In addition, at the end of the 18th century, the reproduction of antique tapestries began, to avoid their deterioration with frequent exposure in liturgical ceremonies. The extraordinary success of the products of the Tapestry led France, under the occupation, to close the factory to eliminate competition from the Parisian production of the Gobelins.
