Description

Jacques-Antoine Vallin is a painter from the school of the Royal Academy of Painting at the end of the 18th century.
After starting his career in the Salons from 1791, he found the path to success in the representation of nymphs and bacchantes, drawn from his knowledge of Greek mythology and ancient history.

The women he paints are also very often illuminated with a divine golden light. This pair of panels is characteristic of his life's work, through the use of his palette in light colors and the deity of these female figures.
