Description

Victor Gabriel Gilbert was a pupil of Victor Adam and Charles Busson, he painted many views of Paris enlivened with flower-sellers. He was best known for his vegetable, poultry and fish-market scenes, and, above all, his flower markets.
Les Halles were the commercial heart of Paris, a place of exchange and supply to the abundant life that had developed over the centuries. Author Emile Zola closely described this anthill of human activity in his 1873 realistic novel Le Ventre de Paris (The Belly of Paris).
