Description

19th Century, Pair of Italian Giltwood ArmchairsThe refined pair of armchairs was made at the beginning of the 19th century in Venice (Italy), in gilded wood, finely carved with rocaille motifs characteristic of the Louis XV era. The carvings create low-relief phytomorphic elements of great plasticity and elegance. The back, penta lobata shape has a particular very balanced inclination, which allows the seats to be comfortable and to be comfortably placed, and to be able to approach the armchairs to a wall without creating an obvious detachment. The armrests are moved and end with a curl sculpture decorated with acanthus leaves. The band under the seat is mixed with a rocaille element in the center. The arched legs and moves, enriched with carvings, end with phytomorphic foot.The
