French sideboard / display cabinet from the second half of the 1800s

The cabinet consists of a lower part closed by two doors in solid walnut which give access to a large compartment divided in half by a solid shelf.

All completed by two drawers with central lock.

The upper part, used as a showcase, is detached from the sideboard top through a walnut panel decorated with frames and two turned columns, that create a truly functional support space.

The showcase still retains its original glass and has, inside, two shelves that divide the space into three compartments, ideal for glasses and cups.
