Description

Louis XVI style bronze table mirror.

There are several attributes of this style such as the ribbons, the pompoms and the lyre at the bottom.

A cherub comes to hold a curtain on the right side as if it were that of a theater, the stage being the mirror and therefore your reflection.

The mirror is in perfect condition, no pitting.

At the rear, a target plate keeps the mirror in place, a removable foot holds the assembly, and manages the angle of inclination allowing a greater or lesser height.

Note that of the four screws, at least two have been replaced.

French work from the beginning of the 20th century.
