Like the earlier impressionism movement became famous for their understanding of depicting what they see and not what one expects; as an example, we imagine snow as white, but the snow changes colour in an extensive colour scale.

Genberg took the impressionism ideas and further developed them.

This painting has a wide spectrum of colours: the snow is purple, blue, pink, and the sky glows in red, yellow, purple and blue in the evening light.

A small spring river flows through the winter landscape with bold and fast brushstrokes similar to Edvard Munch's technique in painting.

This unique, exceptional painting comes with a gorgeous golden frame.
