fleeing the bustle of Paris.

Born in Tulle in Corrèze, the Gard family will settle ten years later in Morigny near Etampes and then in Paris.

From the age of 12, Léon Gard showed his artistic predispositions by making his charcoal portrait.

At 16, he copied old paintings for a play "Little Queen". He receives encouragement from the State and is proposed as a member of the Salon d'Automne the following year.

In 1922, he entered the National School of Fine Arts in Paris, in the studio of the painter Ernest Laurent, but resenting the theories of his teachers and the atmosphere that reigns in this school, he signed a contract with the art dealer Georges Chéron who exhibited Soutine, Foujita and Van Dongen. His friend and patron, Louis Metman, director of the Musée des Arts Décoratifs, then granted him a pension so that he could paint in Toulon.

The economic crisis of 1931 forced the painter to find a job in a painting restoration workshop of which he would become the boss. At the same time, he continues to send his works to the Salon de la Nationale and to exhibit in particular at the Galerie Charpentier and Bernheim in Paris. Thanks to his job, he befriends Sacha Guitry.

In 1946, Léon Gard founded the art magazine Apollo and then undertook a crusade against non-figurative painting. In order to leave the hustle and bustle of Paris, the artist went to stay several times at the Château des Bonshommes in the forest of Isle Adam and took pleasure in representing the Parc des Bonshommes according to the whims of the weather and the seasons.

Léon Gard is a great colorist who strives to represent what he sees with accuracy in compositions where he sometimes expresses his love of precise outline, detail, the weight of things; other times, in a broader way, he surrenders to his love of atmosphere and colorful vibrations; finally, he tries on a few occasions to merge these two almost irreconcilable problems into one in the same work.
