Description

Bronze sculpture with brown patina depicting Bacchante accompanied by two fauns. Inspired by the work "La Bacchante au petit faune" by Jean-Joseph Foucou (1739-1815) in 1777, this Bronze was attributed to Clodion (1738-1814) during its creation, hence the inscription on the base "Bacchante by Clodion - Original Louvre Museum". It is a Barbedienne cast also bearing the round stamp "mechanical reproduction A. Colas". Bacchante, priestess of Bacchus God of drunkenness, is represented with two small fauns. These two half-human, half-goat mythological creatures surround the young woman. One on his right shoulder, hidden face holding a bunch of grapes is dressed in a garland of vine leaves. The other, near his left leg, carries a gourd and a staff. Bacchante is depicted naked and sensual, a light
