Description

This rare pair of lamps in the shape of a lighthouse was made to order in the 1950s.

An ingenious propeller mechanism using the heat of the incandescent bulb makes it possible to set a rotating part in motion and reproduce the flashes of the headlight which are alternately red and green for the first lamp and red and white for the second.

Manufacture is of high quality with careful assembly.

Copper and brass are very thick, the mica used for the colored windows makes it possible to resist the heat of the bulb and we have redone the electrical circuit, keeping the original sockets and sockets.

A push-button switch located on the base of the lamps allows them to be switched on.

These very decorative lamps, surprising in their design and ingenuity, work perfectly.

They are 52 cm high. We made a short video showing the lamps when they work.
