Description

Bronze bust with medal patina representing a handsome young man with soft eyes and wearing butterfly wings. He is covered with a drape held by a knot on his chest. Her bodice is decorated with a rose. In her curly hair is a butterfly. It could be Zephyr, the personification of the wind, which in the myth of Cupid and Psyche is responsible for carrying the young woman to the palace of Eros; the latter being represented in the form of a butterfly. It could also be a representation interpreted by the artist of Psyche (very feminine face but without chest)
