Description

There are some lovely details on this old entrance hall lantern from the late 19th, early 20th. It has four faces, each of which is mounted with a transparent glass. The openwork and lacy parts of the iron structure promise pretty cast shadows. The electrical device has been removed in order to be able to equip the lantern with a standard system. However, placed on a set of candles, it diffuses a very romantic atmosphere... One of the glasses of the hat is broken, in the process of being replaced.
