

Manufacture De Locré - Litron Cup And Its Saucer - Eighteenth Century

230 EUR

Period : 18th century

Condition : Bon etat, un petit éclat au buvant

Length : sous tasse 12.5cm de diamètre par 3cm de haut

Width : tasse 6cm x 6cm

Description

Litron cup and saucer in hard porcelain with polychrome decoration of flower throws and golden threads. Marked: crossed torches in blue, manufacture of Locré. Eighteenth century.

It was in 1773 that Jean Baptiste Locré bought his studio Rue de la Fontaine au Roi. He was born in 1726 into a wealthy family, being the son of a textile merchant of Saxon origin. By renting his land, he had his workshop and ovens built in 1772. On July 14, 1773, he registered his mark in the registers in the form of two crossed blue arrows. In the same year, he joined forces with Laurent Russinger who became his second, mastering the technique of hard porcelain. In 1787, Locré was ruined because of manufacturing costs. He sells it to Russinger who moves it to build new workshops. Also ruined, Russinger

Dealer

Au Singe Vert

céramiques - objets de curiosités

Mobile : 0686689259

7 rue Chabanaïs

Paris 75002

sold the factory to the Pouyat family, however he remained at the head of production. The year 1810 marks the death of Russinger and Locré, gradually causing the bankruptcy of the factory. In 1820, the ovens of the first workshops went out. In 1825, Jean Marx Clauss revived the factory in premises rented from Alexandre Dodé, son-in-law of Russinger. The Locré factory saw three generations of Clauss pass by before being taken over by Achille Bloch in 1887.