Description

Long mistakenly attributed to Hector Guimard, the complex forms of the metallic decorations, asymmetrical, moving and continuous, have a real elegance and strongly evoke Guimard's style. However, it has a more naturalistic appearance, evoking more of a crisscrossing branch pattern, moving away from Guimard's decorative motifs at all stages of his stylistic evolution.

These cases are special orders placed with a ceramist. One of the known examples belonged to the collection of the Macklowe Gallery in New York (2004). Its note gave the provenance of the case as the faïencerie Keller & Guérin, a large artistic ceramic factory in Lunéville, near Nancy. Another example was sold at Ader at the Hôtel Drouot on June 14, 2013.

The small hanging chain is missing. The
