Description

This 19th century sculpture represents a young altar boy. His youthful face, with his forehead largely uncovered and his ears uncovered, is full of childish malice and his expression makes him very sympathetic.
He is full of life by his smile and by the movement of his hands.
He is dressed in a long belted robe which reveals the ends of his shoes and wears a small cap from which long strands of hair escape behind.
In good condition, lacks due to time including a fingertip on the left hand.
Dimensions: H 47 cm / W 18 cm / D 15 cm
