Description

Quick description

Surprising and imposing old carnival mask, circa 1930.

Popular fairground art made entirely of plaster, original polychromy.

Light bulbs at eye level were powered by a small battery box.

This box is no longer functional, a more modern box for 4 conventional batteries has been used, and can easily be removed to put a small transformer.

Good state of preservation for a piece of this kind.

Slightly soiled, patina of time preserved and protected by a veil of wax.

Very atypical and very decorative piece.
