Description

Particularly charming, this piece of furniture displays the rigor of the Louis XIII style liberated by the audacity of the Renaissance, expressed here by typical antique decorations. This is how mascarons with the heads of angels under which fall fruit and foliage fall enclose the doors of the upper section. On the body of the lower Louis XIII, the corner columns with double fillets are surmounted by the heads of winged cherubs, while the central column supports the portrait of the 17th century patron.
